Learning implies a change in behaviour as a consequence of an experience.

In addition to providing over 7,500 leadership positions and delivering over 350 conferences every year to our membership of around 32,000 students and recent graduates, AIESEC also runs an exchange program that enables over 4,450 young people to live and work in one of the over 100 countries and territories of the AIESEC network.

The Way AIESEC does it...

AIESEC provides its members with an integrated development experience comprised of leadership opportunities, international internships and participation in a global learning environment.

The AIESEC global learning environment

A learning environment means an environment which helps people change behaviours and develop competencies. The experience lived through AIESEC facilitates the development of specific competencies in order for the members to become change agents.

The AIESEC global learning environment includes the six following elements:

- Individual discovery and reflexion
- Team experiences
- Learning circles
- Conferences and seminars
- Mentoring
- Virtual space
forums, blogs and resource sharing

The AIESEC competencies:

- inclusiveness of others;
- awareness of others;
- innovation;
- resilience;
- stakeholder focus;
- commitment to results;
- self-awareness;
- flexible thinking;
- developing others;
- effective communication;
- personal effectiveness.

The unique and powerful feature of AIESEC is personal discovery. Young people engage right when they are thinking most about what to do with their lives. AIESEC offers them the incredible opportunity to explore themselves and the role they want to play in the world.
